SPECIAL ZINE FEST ISSUE

SCARY FOOD

This is a very special issue of the Night Drawer because we are not at Le Voyeur on a Sunday but actually at The Olympia Center on a Saturday. It is Oly Zine Fest and we are a workshop in room 102. There is a big TV where you can see the most recently scanned pages and of course all the normal art supplies we bring every week.

This time everyone is making a zine about scary food. Some first thoughts I have are about that puffer fish people make for sushi and if prepared wrong it will kill you. Or maybe just old food. Or maybe a giant burger that is destroying the city godzilla style.

Preparing food can be scary as well. What if you chop off part of your finger cutting a carrot, or forget the roast in the oven and burn your house down. What if you don't cook it thorourly enough and contract salmonella? Ive even heard of fruit that you can eat without washing and it will give you a brain eating bacteria or something. So watch out! I've even bitten the inside of my cheek while trying to eat food... Scary!

The scariest thing of all is the unknown. There is a scary feeling when you are about to eat a food that you don't know what it will taste like. Sort of like this zine, as you turn each page you don't know what new frightening food you will be faced with next. Lucklily there is no way to eat the food in this zine. It is just printed images on paper. I guess you could eat the paper, but it is not reccommended. That would be SCARY.

This zine was made by anyone who went to zine fest and wandered into our little workshop room and wanted to make a page.

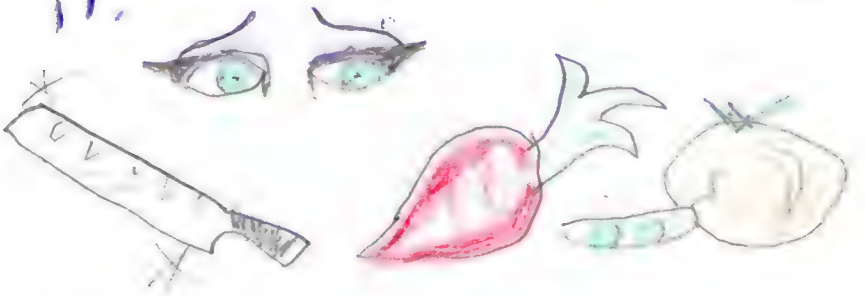
Before 2020, the scary part about food was preparing and cooking it.



But after being locked in the house for a year and a half, ~~forced to~~ cook, now I go to a restaurant and think,

You didn't know that what you interpreted as defiance and disrespect was sensory aversion and neurodivergence, but anyway wouldn't have changed your mind.
